NEUROPSYCHOLOGICAL EVALUATION

Name:	Randall Mays
Age:	50 years 2 months
Date of Birth:	August 3, 1959
Date of Evaluation:	October 9, 2009
Date of Report

REASON FOR REFERRAL

Mr. Mays was referred for a neuropsychological evaluation by his attorney, Jeff L. Haas, to assess for organic brain dysfunction or cognitive impairment as a result of his past drug history. Testing was conducted in a conference room in the visitation area at the Polunsky Unit, Livingston, Texas. Mr. Mays was provided a written consent form, which was explained to him by the examiner, along with a review of his rights and the use and limitations of confidentiality of the examination results. He subsequently agreed to participate in the evaluation.

BRIEF HISTORY

Mr. Mays was hesitant to provide personal history and became tearful when asked questions about his life. Therefore, this history has been gleaned from the records provided. Records indicated that his birth was normal and he developed normally. He was described as quiet and average in school; he had friends. He has a ninth grade education. Mr. Mays did report that he was "kicked out" of school in the tenth grade. School records were not provided; however, Mr. Mays reported that he received special education support services in reading and writing. According to records, Mr. Mays' step mother noted that she knew of no mental illness or drug or alcohol abuse in other family members. Mr. Mays does have a brother, Noble, who was hospitalized at Rusk for a 90 day observation period after committing murder. Noble has been incarcerated for Capital Murder. Mr. Mays' parents are divorced. Both parents have remarried. Records indicate that Mr. Mays has one sister, four brothers, and one step-brother.

Mr. Mays has an extensive history of drug abuse. His family reported that Mr. Mays used a variety of drugs including crystal meth, amphetamines, and heroin since 1976. He used drugs daily and was a drug dealer for 3 years. He was admitted to Terrell State Hospital on July 19, 1983 for a 10 day admission. At that time, he was on probation for possession of drugs. Prior to the admission, he had become incoherent, was hallucinating, and not communicating. He was delusional. He had a diagnosis of Hallucinations.

Mr. Mays' second admission at Terrell State Hospital was from June 6 -- June 10, 1985. He was brought to the hospital by law enforcement agents because he was "spaced out on crystal." After his initial discharge, he had returned to the abuse of alcohol and a variety of illicit drugs. He had reportedly injected himself with amphetamines and crystal meth. Emotionally, he "seemed depressed at times, and underlying anger was detected." There are indications of auditory and visual hallucinations and impaired memory for both recent and remote events. His admitting diagnosis was Amphetamine or Similarly Acting Sympathomimetic Abuse, Episodic. Terrell State Hospital records indicated that Mr. Mays received treatment for drug abuse one month prior to this admission at the VA Hospital. There are no records to indicate when he stopped taking drugs.

There is no record of illnesses, injuries, or other hospitalizations with the exception of the gunshot wound to his left elbow which occurred during his arrest for the current offense. He was hospitalized at East Texas Medical Center, Tyler from May 17 to May 25, 2007. He was discharged against medical advice and in police custody as he refused further care.

Vocationally, Mr. Mays has been employed in a variety of occupations including carpentry, welding, road construction, concrete, and mechanics.

BEHAVIORAL OBSERVATIONS

Mr. Mays was well groomed and dressed in a prison jumpsuit. He was informed of the reasons for testing and the lack of doctor-patient confidentiality. He was informed of his right to participate or not to participate in the evaluation. He voiced understanding and agreed to participate in the evaluation. He was oriented to self, month, year, and location. He thought the day was Wednesday (it was Friday). He was hesitant to answer any personal questions or engage in conversation. On a couple of occasions, he became tearful. He did not cry. Conversation and eye contact were limited. He had numerous somatic complaints including pain in his mouth because of a sore, some pain in his ear, arm/ elbow pain, shoulder pain, stomachache, and back pain. He said that it was difficult for him to sit in the chair. He made a make-shift sling for his left arm by putting his left arm in his jumpsuit. He was provided with breaks as needed. He was given food, but was hesitant to eat it. His attention was brief. There were times when he voiced understanding of directions, but then half-way through the task, he would ask for directions to be repeated. He had glasses which he repeatedly put on and took off. He stated that his glasses were new, and he had some difficulty adjusting to them. He was slow to initiate tasks. He was hesitant to participate in a task which required a computer, stating that previously he had a bad experience with a computer. With prompting, he completed the task. His performance was variable based on attention and distractibility. The TOMM was administered. He scored a 50 on Trial 2 and a 49 on the Retention trial indicating appropriate levels of effort. Motor tasks were not completed with his left hand because of the limited range of motion with his left arm. The scores obtained in this examination are felt to be an accurate reflection of his abilities on the day of the evaluation.

RESULTS AND INTERPRETATION

Intellectual Functioning

Mr. Mays' cognitive functioning was assessed using the RIAS. His overall functioning was in the significantly impaired range with a Composite Intelligence Index score of 63. He earned a Verbal Intelligence Index of 68 and a Nonverbal Intelligence Index of 67.

Academic Functioning

Mr. Mays' academic abilities in the areas of reading and math were assessed using the Woodcock-Johnson – III Test of Achievement. His ability to read a list of words was average. He performed in the average range when required to insert a missing word based on contextual cues. Math calculation abilities were low average. He was able to complete basic operations (addition, subtraction, multiplication, one-digit division), add and subtract fractions, and add negative integers. He made 4 errors as he performed the wrong operation (ex, adding instead of multiplying). Math reasoning abilities remained low average.

Attention/Executive Functioning

Executive functions are a set of cognitive processes which guide goal-directed behaviors. They do not refer to an individual's knowledge or skills but to the mental processes that direct whether and how these are applied to accomplish a goal. They include control of attention, inhibition of impulses, shifting set, working memory, planning, organization, self-monitoring, and emotional regulation.

Mr. Mays' attention and concentration abilities were assessed using the TOMAL-2 and the CPT-II. Overall, his Attention/ Concentration Index on the TOMAL-2 was in the below average range, with a Standard Score of 73. His ability to repeat numbers and letters in a forward sequence was average. He performed in the below average range when repeating a series of numbers and letters in a reverse sequence. His ability to mimic hand position of increasing complexity was significantly impaired. His ability on the CPT-II, a sustained visual attention task, indicated significant attention difficulties. His performance was generally erratic and indicative of poor attention. He tended to have an impulsive response style, and his performance declined as the test progressed.

On a visual scanning task, connecting numbers in a sequence, Mr. Mays' abilities were average. His abilities remained average when simple distractors were added. As more complex distractors were added, his performance was mildly to moderately impaired. On a task of cognitive flexibility, connecting numbers and number words in a sequence (without distractors), his ability was below average. His performance was significantly impaired on a more demanding task of cognitive flexibility, connecting numbers and letters in an alternating sequence (with distractors). As his environment becomes more complex, he experiences increasing difficulty in tracking and responding appropriately.

In order to examine cognitive flexibility, problem-solving, and inhibition, further selected subtests from the D-KEFS were administered. His verbal ability to switch between two semantic categories was in the significantly impaired range. On another activity, Mr. Mays was asked to identify colors and read words as quickly as possible. He did so with a below average and significantly impaired ability, respectively. When asked to inhibit an automatic response in favor of a competing one, Mr. Mays performed in the below average range. On a more complex task requiring him to switch between two sets of instructions, he scored in the significantly impaired range. On a visual problem solving task, requiring strategies to arrange the disks in a specific sequence, his abilities were in the average range. It should be noted that although his functioning was in the average range, he demonstrated a random approach and was able to complete the task within the designated timeframe by trial and error. He continued to exhibit this random approach on a problem solving tasks requiring step-by-step reasoning and logical analysis. On the WCST-IV, he was able to generate one of the six strategies. He required 106 trials to complete the first category. He lost set once.

Perceptual Reasoning

In terms of nonverbal reasoning, Mr. Mays' abilities were in the significantly impaired range on the RIAS. When required to discriminate objects that did not belong, his performance was below average. His attention to detail was significantly impaired.

Memory

Mr. Mays' memory abilities were assessed using the TOMAL-2. His overall verbal memory abilities were significantly impaired. When information was presented verbally in a context (short stories), his immediate and delayed recall was in the below average range. When information was presented verbally over repeated trials (a list of words), his immediate recall was in the below average range. After a 30-minute delay, he was able to recall only seven of the twelve words, resulting in an average ability. With visual cues, he was able to select eleven of the twelve words. Mr. Mays performed in the significantly impaired range on memory tasks with verbal associations and when information was presented verbally and visually simultaneously.

Overall, Mr. Mays' visual memory abilities were significantly impaired. Mr. Mays' ability to recall information presented in a context (faces) was below average. His visual memory ability to select prior presented abstract designs from a series of distractors was significantly impaired. He demonstrated significantly impaired abilities when recalling information presented in a sequence. His ability to recall the location of a visual design was below average.

Language

Mr. Mays' verbal abilities were significantly impaired on the RIAS. His deductive verbal reasoning skills were low average, while his inductive verbal abilities were significantly impaired. His expressive language ability to define words was low average. Mr. Mays' verbal fluency, or ability to quickly generate a list of word when given a specific letter or category, was below average. His receptive language abilities were below average.

Motor and Visual Perceptual Functioning

Mr. Mays is left hand dominant; however, he has limited range of motion with his left arm. He currently uses his right hand when writing. He was unable to complete any of the motor testing with his left hand.

Tapping and grip strength were above average. Manual dexterity was average. Mr. Mays performed in the low average range on a direct measure of visual perception that required limited motor skills. His visualization and mental image skills were average. Mr. Mays' ability to see specific figures when they were hidden within complex, confusing backgrounds was average. His ability to recognize a stimulus figure when it was incompletely drawn was in the low average range.

Overall, Mr. Mays' performance was in the low average range on tasks requiring visual motor integration skills. His ability to copy designs was average. His performance was low average when required to rapidly make certain marks and specific designs.

CONCLUSIONS

Overall, Mr. May's performance throughout the evaluation was quite variable. He demonstrated strengths in hands-on problem solving and academics (although relative to the population of individuals at this age level, his scores were consistently below the population mean). As the complexity of tasks increased, his performance declined relative to his performance on simpler tasks as well as relative to the population of age-mates. Attention was problematic all day. He would voice understanding of a task, then after beginning the task would ask for further explanation. Memory abilities were impaired; however, delayed recall was superior to immediate recall. He demonstrated a constellation of cognitive and behavioral symptoms consistent with the presence of a Major Depressive Disorder.

Records of birth and development were reported to be within normal limits. There is no record of diagnosed learning problems from family; however, Mr. Mays stated that he received special education support in reading and math. Mr. Mays' history of drug and alcohol abuse is significant and has resulted in cognitive impairment. His cognitive profile is consistent with a variety of neuropsychological impairments often associated with chronic amphetamine abuse including memory and attention deficits, decreased reasoning skills, and impaired impulse control, as well as impairments in other executive functions. His ability to understand and function rationally in a complex, rapidly changing environment is highly suspect and certainly below that of the average person. His judgment is impaired, along with his ability to engage in most aspects of reasoning and problem-solving leading to substantial impairments in his decision-making skills. More crystallized skills, such as simple reading and math tasks, are far less impaired, which is common in cases of drug-related dementias. He responds more appropriately to concrete, tangible concepts than to abstract ideas or issues. Additionally, his history is suggestive of the presence of Bipolar Disorder; however, there is insufficient information at this time about his behavioral history prior to his drug abuse and familial background to draw a firm conclusion regarding such a diagnosis.

Axis I- Dementia NOS secondary to chronic amphetamine and related sympathomimetic abuse
Depressive Disorder, NOS
Rule out Bipolar Disorder

Axis II- Deferred

Axis III-Status physical impairment to left arm secondary to gunshot wound

Axis IV-Incarceration, pending execution, separation from family and friends
